

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

FOR ADDITIONAL LOCAL ITEMS SEE INSIDE PAGES.

THE BYRNES MURDER.

Investigation Before the Coroner this Morning—Evidence Elicited.

This morning, at 10 o'clock, Coroner Daniels held an inquest into the case of the two brothers, Christopher Byrnes, aged 23 years, and Edward Byrnes, aged 26 years, who were shot and killed on election night at Fourth and Monroe streets, in the Fourth ward.

Charles F. Specht, residing at No. 236 Shippen street, testified that Samuel Holt, James Pollock, with the Byrnes, and himself, were on election night, in Third street, above Catharine; thence we went to a tavern in Fourth street, near Monroe; while there Christopher Byrnes gave a cheer for the Niagara House; Holt, Pollock, and myself, named Prentiss, named pulled out blackjacks; we got outside the door; Holt then fired at me; I called out his name; I was carried to Hardy's drug store by two men named McAllister and McNulty; Hardy said we were shot; I was taken to the hospital; I left the hospital the next morning, and made a charge against the parties; I heard four shots fired; I saw Holt point the pistol at me, but saw no other person's hands.

Matilda Burton, living No. 332 Stanley street, testified that she was sitting on her door-step; heard the first shot fired; saw Christopher Byrnes fall at the corner of Stanley street; ran to him and asked, "Who are you?" he said, "I'm shot," and spoke no more; the shot was fired; I saw Holt point the pistol at me; I saw Holt raise his arm and fire; I ran away because the shots were coming in every direction.

Susan Burk, residing No. 2 Brunswick place, corroborated the testimony of the other witnesses; she could not identify either Powell or Holt, the prisoners present at the hearing.

Mary Yeager, living at No. 326 Monroe street, testified that on the night in question she was standing on her door-step; saw a man running with a pistol in his hand; was told that there were three men lying dead at the corner; saw no one shot; can't positively say that I recognize the accused; I saw a man running with a pistol in his hand; saw a man named Malone; Virginia Lemon, living at No. 3 Brunswick place, was sworn, but knew nothing herself about the murders; her only knowledge was what she had learned from other parties.

Alfred J. Evans, living at No. 409 Harmony street, testified:—On the night of the occurrence was at work in my shop, No. 728 South Fourth street; heard the pistol shot; opened the door and saw about eight men; saw a man in the street raise his arm and fire, with the exclamation:—"That will do," or "That is good;" I then shut the door; couldn't recognize the man who did the shooting; can't identify the person who shot at me.

Ellen Shaw, living at No. 3 Brunswick place, was sworn. Her testimony amounted to nothing. She was in company with the witness Virginia Lemon.

W. G. Reynolds, living in Guilford street, below Shippen, testified:—

On Tuesday night, between 9 and 10 o'clock, Holt, Pollock, Specht, and the two Byrnes came into Dorer's, Third and Stanley streets; took a drink there; then went to the Niagara House; then began singing a song; Byrnes was also singing; the party was then put out, when Holt or Pollock said, "If they see us on me I will kill her" (meaning Mrs. Dorer); the place was then cleared; we went to the corner of Third and Monroe streets; heard four shots fired; saw Sam Holt talking to two women and a man; Holt made the remark, "I put two of them out of the road; know the prisoners; Holt is the one who shot; the expression; I was close by him when he uttered it."

Catherine Simons, living at No. 725 S. Fourth street, testified:—I keep a lager-beer house; on the night of the occurrence I was in the place; Christopher Byrnes was with me; he asked for a drink; I treated them; they then left; I heard the shots while I was in the house.

Dr. Shanleigh testified that he made a post-mortem examination of the bodies of the two Byrnes and Christopher Byrnes; they came to their death from gunshot wounds; he extracted the balls; Christopher also had a wound upon him that might have been made by a bullet.

Officer George White testified that he heard the words at the house made by Christopher Byrnes; that Holt had shot the shooting; he arrested Powell, and found a revolver upon his persons with three balls discharged.

Officer Hamlin testified that on the night of election he was in the Station House; the two men had been shot; that they were at the Niagara House; saw Holt go into a drinking saloon; arrested him and found a pistol on his person; a three-barreled revolver.

He returned upon Saturday morning at ten o'clock.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

WITNESS OF QUARTER SESSIONS—Judge Lusk, with the addition of Judge Johnson. The court met this morning and resumed the trial of the case of the abandoned looking company of the prison dock at Fair, blue-eyed lat of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and the evidence in this strange place attracted the attention of many persons.

On the 15th of the month, a member of the Bar, on entering C. C. was at once accused by the child's appearance in a general manner, and the little prisoner frankly confessed that he had, under the persuasion of the private, and in a general manner, consented to abandon the prosecution; to which charitable proposition Mr. Riddiman kindly gave his assent.

Under his fortunate arrangement the indictment was returned against the defendant, and a verdict of no guilty returned. Thus by the timely intervention of good-hearted gentlemen, instead of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and lessened, he was set at liberty with a clean record for his appearance in the truly grateful. No parent or acquaintance appears to be left behind.

TRIVIAL CASES. Sarah Smith was acquitted of a charge of assault and battery.

Henry Holland was convicted of a charge of larceny.

William Filiter was acquitted of a charge of picking pockets.

Thomas B. Speakman was convicted of a charge of assault and battery.

On the 15th of the month, a member of the Bar, on entering C. C. was at once accused by the child's appearance in a general manner, and the little prisoner frankly confessed that he had, under the persuasion of the private, and in a general manner, consented to abandon the prosecution; to which charitable proposition Mr. Riddiman kindly gave his assent.

Under his fortunate arrangement the indictment was returned against the defendant, and a verdict of no guilty returned. Thus by the timely intervention of good-hearted gentlemen, instead of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and lessened, he was set at liberty with a clean record for his appearance in the truly grateful. No parent or acquaintance appears to be left behind.

TRIVIAL CASES. Sarah Smith was acquitted of a charge of assault and battery.

Henry Holland was convicted of a charge of larceny.

William Filiter was acquitted of a charge of picking pockets.

Thomas B. Speakman was convicted of a charge of assault and battery.

On the 15th of the month, a member of the Bar, on entering C. C. was at once accused by the child's appearance in a general manner, and the little prisoner frankly confessed that he had, under the persuasion of the private, and in a general manner, consented to abandon the prosecution; to which charitable proposition Mr. Riddiman kindly gave his assent.

Under his fortunate arrangement the indictment was returned against the defendant, and a verdict of no guilty returned. Thus by the timely intervention of good-hearted gentlemen, instead of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and lessened, he was set at liberty with a clean record for his appearance in the truly grateful. No parent or acquaintance appears to be left behind.

MORE ELECTION ARRESTS.—On election day there was a general row at the polls at Twenty-second and Coates streets, when Augustan, a deputy sheriff, was one of those who created the disturbance by assaulting Mr. Honey, one of the window book-keepers. Yesterday he was arrested, and on being given a hearing before Alderman Hancock, was required to give bail in $1000 for trial.

Richard Wiggins, another of the disturbers of the peace, was held to bail in a like amount by the same magistrate.

Richard Lodge was chased to Twenty-second and Wallace streets, into a grocery store, where, at this period, they are in want, and the mob, who were arrested and sent below by Alderman Hancock.

A wagon containing a number of rouches, who were preparing for a grand row, was stopped on Broad street, and the rouches, under the contents by the police. The parties were taken before Alderman Dallas, who bound them over for a breach of the peace and inciting to riot. They gave the names of Pat. Wilson, Jimmy Mullen, John Callahan, James H. Lee, Lawrence Burns, Oliver Connelly, Charles McConey, and Hughie Donnell.

THE MURDER OF POLICEMAN YOUNG.—AID FOR THE WIDOW AND ORPHANS.—Officer Young, who on the night of Tuesday last, was murdered by some unknown assassin at Eighth and Lombard streets, leaves a wife and six little children. At this period, they are in want, and the mob, who will soon add another to the little group of fatherless children, is entirely incapable of doing anything for their relief. A number of kind-hearted citizens, immediately upon the death of the policeman, organized a relief fund, and have already taken active steps to alleviate their want.

They have commenced subscriptions for the support of the family, and now call upon all our citizens to contribute to the relief fund. The widow, Officer Young was a quiet, orderly, respected citizen, and was sent to the place where he so unfortunately met with his fatal injuries upon the special plea of the citizens of that precinct.

Contributions, however small or large, will be thankfully received. Let them be sent to James C. Hand, Treasurer of the subscription fund, at the corner of Market and Second streets, to Daniel Haddock, at 211 and 213 Market streets, or to J. M. Maris, No. 711 Market street.

HOW SHE WOULD HAVE VOTED.—In a Market street car this morning, two gentlemen sitting opposite each other became very earnest in their discussion of the result of the election. One of them was a sound Republican, the other a rampant Democrat. Democracy was strongly opposed to the election of Mr. Lincoln, and would not vote for him. The Republican declared that he would vote for Lincoln, and would not vote for any other man.

Harris and his band are the only parties in the section who attempt to make any kind of law, or to do anything in the way of no way countenanced by the distillers or the people.

Harris and his band are the only parties in the section who attempt to make any kind of law, or to do anything in the way of no way countenanced by the distillers or the people.

INDIA.

Where All Khan's Conquests. The telegram from India, forwarded by way of London, and through the Atlantic cable, and published in our telegraph columns, reports the present situation of the Indian empire, which had been surging for many months from the scene of the Russian conquests in Central Asia towards the northwestern frontier of British India, and which frequently threatened the British possessions in the East.

By mail from Cabool we learn that Emir Sher Ali entered that city on the evening of Friday, the 10th inst. The Emir Sher Ali, with an escort of 3000 soldiers, was accompanied by a number of British officers, and one of them holding her arms and covering her mouth, robbed her of the money. They then left her, and she commenced to cry out that they had robbed her. The conductor then came back and threatened to tie her up if she did not stop, remarking to the passengers at the same time that the woman was crazy. She persisted, however, in her assertions, when, according to her assertion, they tied her up with a cord, and fastened her to her seat, and then, after sending the passengers who were in the car into a forward coach, they looked both doors and left her in the car throughout the night.

Under his fortunate arrangement the indictment was returned against the defendant, and a verdict of no guilty returned. Thus by the timely intervention of good-hearted gentlemen, instead of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and lessened, he was set at liberty with a clean record for his appearance in the truly grateful. No parent or acquaintance appears to be left behind.

TRIVIAL CASES. Sarah Smith was acquitted of a charge of assault and battery.

Henry Holland was convicted of a charge of larceny.

William Filiter was acquitted of a charge of picking pockets.

Thomas B. Speakman was convicted of a charge of assault and battery.

On the 15th of the month, a member of the Bar, on entering C. C. was at once accused by the child's appearance in a general manner, and the little prisoner frankly confessed that he had, under the persuasion of the private, and in a general manner, consented to abandon the prosecution; to which charitable proposition Mr. Riddiman kindly gave his assent.

Under his fortunate arrangement the indictment was returned against the defendant, and a verdict of no guilty returned. Thus by the timely intervention of good-hearted gentlemen, instead of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and lessened, he was set at liberty with a clean record for his appearance in the truly grateful. No parent or acquaintance appears to be left behind.

TRIVIAL CASES. Sarah Smith was acquitted of a charge of assault and battery.

Henry Holland was convicted of a charge of larceny.

William Filiter was acquitted of a charge of picking pockets.

Thomas B. Speakman was convicted of a charge of assault and battery.

On the 15th of the month, a member of the Bar, on entering C. C. was at once accused by the child's appearance in a general manner, and the little prisoner frankly confessed that he had, under the persuasion of the private, and in a general manner, consented to abandon the prosecution; to which charitable proposition Mr. Riddiman kindly gave his assent.

Under his fortunate arrangement the indictment was returned against the defendant, and a verdict of no guilty returned. Thus by the timely intervention of good-hearted gentlemen, instead of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and lessened, he was set at liberty with a clean record for his appearance in the truly grateful. No parent or acquaintance appears to be left behind.

TRIVIAL CASES. Sarah Smith was acquitted of a charge of assault and battery.

Henry Holland was convicted of a charge of larceny.

William Filiter was acquitted of a charge of picking pockets.

Thomas B. Speakman was convicted of a charge of assault and battery.

On the 15th of the month, a member of the Bar, on entering C. C. was at once accused by the child's appearance in a general manner, and the little prisoner frankly confessed that he had, under the persuasion of the private, and in a general manner, consented to abandon the prosecution; to which charitable proposition Mr. Riddiman kindly gave his assent.

Under his fortunate arrangement the indictment was returned against the defendant, and a verdict of no guilty returned. Thus by the timely intervention of good-hearted gentlemen, instead of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and lessened, he was set at liberty with a clean record for his appearance in the truly grateful. No parent or acquaintance appears to be left behind.

TRIVIAL CASES. Sarah Smith was acquitted of a charge of assault and battery.

Henry Holland was convicted of a charge of larceny.

William Filiter was acquitted of a charge of picking pockets.

Thomas B. Speakman was convicted of a charge of assault and battery.

On the 15th of the month, a member of the Bar, on entering C. C. was at once accused by the child's appearance in a general manner, and the little prisoner frankly confessed that he had, under the persuasion of the private, and in a general manner, consented to abandon the prosecution; to which charitable proposition Mr. Riddiman kindly gave his assent.

Under his fortunate arrangement the indictment was returned against the defendant, and a verdict of no guilty returned. Thus by the timely intervention of good-hearted gentlemen, instead of being taken to the city of Philadelphia, and lessened, he was set at liberty with a clean record for his appearance in the truly grateful. No parent or acquaintance appears to be left behind.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant. The assessors, however, were not to be deterred, and they proceeded to the distillery, where they were met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

KENTUCKY.

The Perils of Assessors in the District of Columbia. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their district, for the purpose of measuring the capacity of those establishments, according to their instructions from revenue headquarters. They were accompanied by six distillers, but the last one they went to was very near winding up for good the measuring business in that section, so far as they were concerned. The institution was on Wolf creek, some nine miles west of Jamstown, and was owned by a gentleman named Wade, who received the assessors courteously, and offered them every facility for the work they had on hand. While they were in the distillery, a dispute arose between the assessors and Wade, who heads a gang of ruffians equally unscrupulous with himself, rose up to where the buggy and horse of the officers were standing outside the distillery grounds. Here he was met by the assessors, who were accompanied by a number of ruffians, who were to whom he imparted the some that welcome intelligence of his design to shoot the revenue officers at sight, and gave them to understand that his followers were not far distant.

THE PERILS OF ASSESSORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. On the 15th instant, Colonel Campbell and Colonel John T. Fox, United States Assessors for the Third District, set out from Elizabethtown with the intention of visiting a number of distilleries in their